

Tim Jarvis is the author of the blog, 'There's a Hadedda in my Garden' which considers educational issues, teen wellbeing and life on the campus of a rural boarding school. Tim has spoken at numerous conferences and schools around South Africa and indeed overseas, including the International Boy's School Coalition conference where he presented a workshop in Toronto, Canada. Tim has written articles for the Independent Education publication in South Africa and the Christian Teacher's Journal in Australia, as well as a blog post for the Guardian Newspaper in the United Kingdom.

Tim was born in London and raised in Herefordshire in the United Kingdom. He then spent ten years in Zimbabwe from 1994 -2004. Five years of this time were at Gateway Primary School and a further five years as Director of the Gateway Teacher Training Programme. Tim Jarvis is married to Amanda (Interior Decorator & Landscape Gardener) with three sons, Samuel (19), Isaac (17) and Benjamin (14).

Tim is currently the Senior Master: Pastoral Care at Michaelhouse where he has been since Easter 2004. Tim holds an Honours degree in Education from the University of Exeter, UK, and an Honours degree in Psychology from the University of South Africa. He is currently in the process of registering with the Health Professions Council of South Africa, as a Registered Counsellor. Tim is a Lay Minister in the Diocese of KwaZulu-Natal and is regular preacher in the Michaelhouse Chapel.

You can follow Tim on Twitter @timothyjejarvis or read his blog at timothyjejarvis.wordpress.com